Guard: Property giant dodges OT

St. Paul's Madison Equities denies man's claim

By Frederick Melo
fmelo@pioneerpress.com

As a security guard for downtown St. Paul's largest property owner, Madison Equities, Chris Lewis was eager for extra hours beyond his full workweek at the First National Bank Building.

The 20-year-old said his supervisor told him he could moonlight at the company's other major buildings, such as the Alliance Bank Building or Park Square Court. But Lewis had to sign in anew — as if he were starting a new workday for a different employer.

Even after working 16-hour days, he never received pay at the time-and-a-half overtime rate.

"Instead of putting those extra eight hours on the First Bank time sheet, they would say, 'You've got to put it on the Madison Equities time sheet,'" Lewis recalled. "Even if I didn't work any other building, we would get two checks, and it would show up as base pay. We would not get overtime at all."

Lewis received checks with the same corporate address, "same suite number, but two different LLCs. It was all stamped with James Crockarell's name, every single time. ... This is all owned by James Crockarell."

Mulvaney backs off trade-off assertion

Pompeo defends Giuliani's involvement in Ukraine affairs

By Karoun Demirjian
Washington Post

Acting White House Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney continued to back away Sunday from his public acknowledgment of a quid pro quo in which the Trump administration leveraged military aid to Ukraine for an investigation that could politically benefit President Donald Trump, while the top U.S. diplomat defended Trump's private lawyer's role in Ukrainian affairs as "completely appropriate."

"I never said there was a quid pro quo, cause there isn't," Mulvaney insisted on Fox News Sunday, insisting that while he "didn't speak clearly maybe on Thursday," there couldn't have been a quid pro quo because "the aid flowed."

Mulvaney has struggled to explain his abrupt about-face since

Dance the Lions away

Vikings quarterback Kirk Cousins celebrates a touchdown run by Dalvin Cook late in Minnesota's 42-30 win over the Lions on Sunday in Detroit. Cousins had a game worth celebrating, too — he threw for a season-high 337 yards and had four touchdown passes for a second consecutive game.

Hong Kong protesters defy latest ban

Turbulent scene as they clash with police

By Kelvin Chan
Associated Press

HONG KONG — Hong Kong streets descended into chaotic scenes following an unauthorized pro-democracy rally Sunday, as protesters set up roadblocks and torched businesses, and police responded with tear gas and a water cannon.

Protesters tossed firebombs and took their anger out on shops with mainland Chinese ties as they skirmished late into the evening with riot police, who unleashed numerous tear gas rounds on short notice, angering residents and passers-by.

Police had beefed up security measures ahead of the rally, for
