President Trump, in an acceptance speech at the Republican convention Thursday, again cast himself as a law-and-order candidate.

By ALEXANDER BURNS and MAGGIE HABERMANN

Washington, D.C. — President Trump accused the Democratic Party, and its nominee, Joe Biden, of creating a “crime wave” because of the coronavirus pandemic.

It was not only a matter of policy. Mr. Trump, who has made crime and law enforcement a central theme of his presidency, was also presenting himself as the one candidate who could fend off the threat of violent crime.

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

BY JEANNA SMIALEK

WASHINGTON — For a man who speaks wherever he can, President Donald J. Trump had very little to say about his handling of the coronavirus pandemic even though it took a big toll on the economy.

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

BY PETER BAKER

WASHINGTON — President Donald J. Trump is moving into the final three months of his re-election campaign in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic, with most Americans saying that “I alone can fix it.”

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A7

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A6

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A5

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A4

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A3

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A2

He Boasts of Exploits and Companions of Perceived Slights

PAGE A1