NORTH CAROLINA, INDIANA PRIMARIES

OBAMA PADS LEAD

The Illinois senator scores a decisive win in North Carolina while Clinton takes Indiana by a razor-thin margin in two primaries where race appeared to play a major role.

FRONTRUNNER: Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., is within 200 delegates of securing his party's nomination for president.

FADING? Hillary Rodham Clinton's split decision Tuesday may doom her hopes of winning the support of superdelegates.

Barack Obama won a blowout Tuesday in North Carolina, putting him closer than ever to the nomination. But Hillary Rodham Clinton, with the support of working-class whites, won by a narrow margin in Indiana, allowing her to survive but weakening her case for help from Democratic superdelegates. By winning the night's bigger prize, Obama stretched his delegate and vote lead and rebutted Clinton's claim of momentum since her win April 22 in Pennsylvania. News 4

Chloe Langis is just 15, but she's loved to cook for as long as she can remember.

As a little girl, she followed her grandma Francine Langis around the restaurant she owned, helping her prepare meals for customers.

"I remember getting so mad," the Garden Grove teen says. "Because she could do everything perfect, and my little hands just couldn't do it the same way sometimes."

At an age when other kids were locked on Disney Channel or Nickelodeon, Chloe clicked her way to the Food Network, where she obses-

Expert shortage hurts drug cases

Most officers in O.C. lack the training.

Drivers across Orange County who are driving under the influence will likely never be punished for their dangerous actions, because few police officers sworn to protect the streets are trained to recognize what is causing their impairment - drugs.

Drug-related crashes cost lives and dollars every year, but with fewer than 100 certified drug recognition experts in the county's law enforcement ranks, there is little that can be done, frustrating prosecutors and officers alike.

"If we don't have a DRE," said Deputy District Attorney Andrew Katz, "we can't prove it."

O.C. HOUSE DROPS WITH THE MEDIAN

A photo of Sergio and Monica Anaya's house ran on the front page of the Register in 2005, a case study in a runaway housing market in which the median price for the first time reached $600,000 - the price the Anayas paid. Now the house is the symbol of a market in decline, as the Anayas can no longer afford it and are trying to sell it for less than they owe, for a loss between 20 percent and 27 percent. Marketplace on News 17
