ANATOMY OF A MANHUNT

FBI releases images culled from multitude of videos, photos

Why release photos of suspects?

The FBI released these photos of two men — dubbed Suspect 1, in the dark hat, and Suspect 2, in the white hat — on Thursday.

Generally, law enforcement agencies release photos of suspects only as a last resort, when they need the public's help in identifying or capturing someone.

Releasing photos can be a mixed bag: It can tip off a suspect and deny police the element of surprise. It also can trigger an avalanche of tips, forcing police to waste valuable time chasing them down.

BOSTON — The FBI released photos and video Thursday of two suspects in the Boston Marathon bombing and asked for the public's help in identifying them, zeroing in on the two men on surveillance-camera footage less than three days after the deadly attack.

The photos depict one man in a dark baseball cap and the other in a white cap worn backward. The men were seen walking together in the crowd, and the one in the white hat was seen setting down a backpack at the site of the second explosion, said Richard DesLauriers, FBI agent in charge in Boston.

"Somebody out there knows these individuals as friends, neighbors, co-workers or family members of the suspects. Though it may be difficult, the nation is counting on those with information to come forward and provide it to us," DesLauriers said.

Within moments of the announcement, the FBI website crashed, perhaps because of a crush of visitors.

The two men are considered armed and extremely dangerous, DesLauriers said, and people who see them should not approach them.

"Do not take any action on your own," he warned.

The break in the investigation came just days after the attack that tore off limbs, shattered windows and raised the specter of another terrorist attack on U.S. soil. Seven victims remained in critical condition.

Killed were 8-year-old Martin Richard, of Boston, 29-year-old restaurant manager Krystle Campbell, of Medford, Mass., and Lu Lingzi, a 23-year-old Boston University graduate student from China.

PIEDMONT — A 19-year-old man inspired by the movie "Into the Wild" to leave civilization and live off the land has gone missing, leaving his family in Piedmont to hope he escaped the fate of that true story's protagonist.

Dustin Self, 19, left Oklahoma a little more than a month ago for Oregon, where he planned to camp in secluded areas and experience nature by himself. His mother, Tammy Self, said Thursday no one has heard from him since March 16, shortly after he left.
