Cops: Suicide calls on the rise

By JEFF KUNERTH
Staff Writer

It was late in the afternoon on Nov. 20, 2011, at the end of her shift, when Orlando Police Sgt. Tami Edwards received the call for a Code 28A — a suicide attempt. She drove to the parking garage of the City View apartments in Parramore, parked her car and walked onto the open, top floor of the seven-story garage.

Sitting on the narrow edge of a wall was a large woman in her 30s wearing jeans and a T-shirt. The woman used an overturned trash can to climb onto the ledge. She was talking about government agencies interfering in her life.

Edwards stepped closer, engaging her in conversation, saying she was there to help.

"I don't need your help. I don't want you here," the woman said. "Why are you here?" Edwards said.

2015: Universal Orlando, top, now has two theme parks and four hotels, with a fifth on the way. A water park is coming soon. 1990, from left: The park opens June 7; an aerial view; workers paint a facade to prepare for Hollywood Boulevard's debut.

AN EXPLOSIVE 25-YEAR RIDE

By SANDRA PEDICINI | Staff Writer

Universal Studios' Orlando debut was not exactly a show stopper. Attendance fell short of projections even as the theme park gave out free tickets for months to make up for chronically malfunctioning rides.

A quarter-century later, Universal's story has taken a much different turn.

Universal celebrates its 25th anniversary today as a theme-park powerhouse poised for growth as explosive as any blockbuster action movie. Investment from owner Comcast Corp. — along with Harry Potter magic, Minion mayhem and Transformers power — has generated double-digit attendance growth at its two theme parks, Universal Studios Florida and Islands of Adventure.

"It's just been an amazing journey to be part of," said Mark Woodbury, a 27-year Universal veteran who is now president of creative design and development throughout Universal Parks

Teen killed in case of mistaken identity

By SUSAN JACOBSON | Staff Writer

Leonard "Leo" Stay was known for his big smile, frequent jokes and willingness to help.

He had been on the Ocoee High School wrestling team for only a semester, but in that short time he became one of its strongest leaders.

"Nobody could be down around Leo," head wrestling coach John Parmenter said Saturday. "He kept people up. He kept them going. Nothing was impossible for Leo."

All that came to an end late Friday, when Leo's 32-year-old brother shot and killed him, evidently mistaking him for an intruder at their home in Pine Hills, the Orange County Sheriff's Office said.

"It's devastating," Ocoee High athletic director Steven McHale said. "He's the last person you

Parramore after-school program is changing lives

By KATE SANTICH | Staff Writer

Shanta Barton-Stubbs was a 21-year-old college student when her father, a part-time preacher, moved his church from Winter Park to a rented storefront in Parramore. One afternoon, she reluctantly offered to help him clean the place.

"It was this old, gloomy, mold-infested building on the verge of being condemned," she says. "And there were these four little kids just hanging around on the street, no one supervising them, so I invited them inside to play. The only thing I could find was a game of Monopoly."

Her good deed complete, she left that evening with no plans to return — ever. But the next day, her dad called. "Those kids are back and they're asking for you," he said.

That was 11 years ago.

Today, Barton-Stubbs' nonprofit New Image Youth Center is three rented Parramore Avenue storefronts, their innards scrubbed and brightly painted, with donated books and computers bought
