BEARCATS GET THE ONE THEY NEEDED

THE ENQUIRER/KAREEM ELGAZZAR

Cincinnati Bearcats forward Octavius Ellis, left, and guard Kevin Johnson pump up the crowd in the first half against Southern Methodist University on Sunday at Fifth Third Arena. The noisy sellout crowd of just over 13,000 enjoyed a Senior Day performance that saw UC enhance its NCAA resume, as the Bearcats beat the Mustangs 61-54 at home.

Gov. Bevin's administration sues second abortion clinic

Deborah Yetter
(Louisville) Courier-Journal

FRANKFORT, Ky. - The administration of Gov. Matt Bevin last week filed a lawsuit against a second abortion clinic in Kentucky, claiming the EMW Women's Clinic in Lexington is operating unlawfully.

The lawsuit follows a similar action last month in which the Bevin administration filed a lawsuit against Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, alleging it had begun offering abortions without a license.

Planned Parenthood has denied the allegations but suspended offering abortions while it tries to resolve the licensing dispute.

Wednesday's lawsuit against EMW prompted Michael Aldridge, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Kentucky, to denounce what he called "the increasingly hostile climate around access to abortion in our commonwealth."

"Safe and legal abortions are already difficult for many Kentucky women to access, with only two clinics in Louisville and Lexington," Aldridge said. "Through lawsuits and a string of anti-abortion bills this legislative session, constitutional rights are being eroded under the guise of women's safety."

EMW currently is the state's only abortion provider. It operates its main clinic in Louisville and offers part-time services in Lexington.

Bevin has described himself as "unapologetically pro-life." But both lawsuits say the health and safety of patients are the primary concern for suing the abortion clinics.
